Contributors

Julian Agyeman is an assistant professor of urban and environmental policy and planning at Tufts University. He is the cofounder and the coeditor of Local Environment: The International Journal of Justice and Sustainability. His books include Local Environmental Policies and Strategies (1994), which he coedited with Bob Evans; Just Sustainabilities: Development in an Unequal World (2003), which he coedited with Robert D. Bullard and Bob Evans; Sustainable Communities and the Challenge of Environmental Justice (2005); and The New Countryside? Ethnicity, Nation, and Exclusion in Contemporary Rural Britain (forthcoming).

John Barry is director of the Institute of Governance, Public Policy, and Social Research, and a reader in politics at Queen's University, Belfast. He is the author of Rethinking Green Politics: Nature, Virtue, Progress (1999), winner of the Political Studies Association's W. J. M. MacKenzie prize for best book published in political science and Environment and Social Theory (1999), and the coauthor (with John Proops) of Citizenship, Sustainability, and Environmental Research (2000). He is the coeditor of Sustaining Liberal Democracy: Ecological Challenges and Opportunities (with Marcel Wissenburg, 2001); The International Encyclopedia of Environmental Politic (with E. Gene Frankland, 2001); Europe, Globalization, and Sustainable Development (with Brian Baxter and Richard Dunphy, 2004); The State and the Global Ecological Crisis (with Robyn Eckerlsey, 2005), and Intervening in Northern Ireland: Critically Representing the Conflict and Its Legacy (with Marysia Zalewski), a special edition of Critical Review of International Social and Political Philosophy (2005).

Derek Bell is a lecturer in political thought at the University of Newcastle, United Kingdom. His principal research interests are in political liberalism and environmentalism, especially the relationships among justice, democracy, and the environment. He has published widely on these subjects, including articles in Environmental Ethics, Environmental Politics, and Political Studies. He is currently working on a book on global justice and the environment.

Monica Carlsson is an assistant professor in the Department of Curriculum Research at the Danish University of Education. Her research area is curriculum and evaluation research within environmental and health education. She is the coauthor (with Birgitte Hoffmann) of Samarbejde om bæredygtig udvikling. Nye perspektiver på samarbejde mellem skole og eksterne aktører (Collaboration on Sustainable Development: New Perspectives on Collaboration between Schools and External Actors) (2004), and the author of "Evaluerer vi det, vi tror, vi evaluerer?" ("Do We Evaluate What We Think We Evaluate?"), KVAN 65 (March 2003).

James Connelly is a professor of political thought at Southampton Institute, United Kingdom. Among his publications are Politics and the Environment: From Theory to Practice (with Graham Smith, 1999, second edition 2003), and Metaphysics, Method, and Politics: The Political Philosophy of R. G. Collingwood, 2003. He coedited the books Philosophy, History, and Civilization: Interdisciplinary Perspectives on R. G. Collingwood (with David Boucher and Tariq Modood, 1995), and R. G. Collingwood: An Essay on Philosophical Method (with Giuseppina D'Oro, new edition, 2005).

Andrew Dobson is a professor of politics at the Open University, United Kingdom. Among his publications are An Introduction to the Politics and Philosophy of José Ortega y Gasset (1989), The Politics of Reason: Jean-Paul Sartre and a Theory of History (1993), Green Political Thought (third edition, 2000), Justice and the Environment (1998), and Citizenship and the Environment (2003). He has edited or coedited The Green Reader (1991), The Politics of Nature (with Paul Lucardie, 1993), Fairness and Futurity (1998), Political Theory and the Ecological Challenge (with Robyn Eckersley, 2005), and Citizenship, Environment, Economy (with Angel Valencia, 2005).

Bob Evans is a professor at and director of the Sustainable Cities Research Institute at Northumbria University, Newcastle, United Kingdom. He is author of many books, book chapters, and articles on land use planning, environmental policy, and local governance. He is the cofounder and the coeditor of the international journal Local Environment, and has worked as a town planner in the public, private, and community sectors. He is the UK chair of the European Union's Working Group on Urban Environmental Management. His most recent book is Governing Sustainable Cities (2004).

Stephen Gough is a senior lecturer in education and a member of the Centre for Research in Education and the Environment at the University of Bath, United Kingdom. He is currently researching the role of learning in sustainable procurement management in a project funded by the UK National Health Service Purchasing and Supply Agency. He is a fellow of the Royal Geographical Society. His most recent books are Sustainable Development and Learning: Framing the Issues (2003), and Key Issues in Sustainable Development and Learning: A Critical Review (2004), both written with William Scott.

Dave Horton is an Economic and Social Research Council postdoctoral fellow at the Institute for Environment, Philosophy, and Public Policy at Lancaster University, United Kingdom. His ongoing research explores cultures of sustainability, and his main current interest is in the sociology of bicycling. His recent work has appeared in Critical Mass: Bicycling's Defiant Celebration (ed. Chris Carlsson, 2002), Nature Performed: Environment, Culture, and Performance (ed. Bronislaw Szerszynski, Wallace Heim, and Claire Waterton, 2003), and the journal Environmental Politics. He is an environmental activist and cofounder of Shifting Ground, a workers' cooperative dedicated to the creation of new kinds of space between the activist and academic worlds.

Bjarne Bruun Jensen is a professor in health and environmental education at the Danish University of Education. He is director of the university's Research Programme for Environmental and Health Education. Among his publications are recent articles in Journal of Curriculum Studies, Journal of Environmental Education Research, Environmental Education Research, and Health Education. He is the coeditor (with Karsten Schnack and Venka Simovska, 2002 of Critical Environmental and Health Education: Research Issues and Challenges.

Alan Lewis is a professor of economic psychology at the University of Bath, United Kingdom. His publications include The Psychology of Taxation (1982), The Comprehensibility of Taxation (with Simon James and Frances Allison, 1987), The Economic Mind (with Adrian Furnham, 1986), The New Economic Mind (with Paul Webley and Adrian Furnham, 1995), and Morals, Markets, and Money (2002). He has also edited Mental Mirrors (with Charles Antaki, 1986), Ethics and Economic Affairs (with Karl-Erik Warneryd, 1994), and Student Debt (with Adrian Scott and Stephen Lea, 2001).

Sherilyn MacGregor is a visiting research associate at the Institute for Environment, Philosophy, and Public Policy at Lancaster University, United Kingdom. She is author of Beyond Mothering Earth: Ecological Citizenship and the Gendered Politics of Care (2005).

David Schlosberg is an associate professor at and chair of the Department of Political Science at Northern Arizona University, where he teaches political theory and environmental politics. He is the author of Environmental Justice and the New Pluralism (1999), and the coauthor with John Dryzek, David Downes, and Christian Hunold of Green States and Social Movements (2003). His current research projects include examining electronic public participation and defining environmental justice.

William Scott is a professor of education at the University of Bath, United Kingdom, where he directs the Centre for Research in Education and the Environment. He edits the international refereed academic journals Environmental Education Research and Assessment and Evaluation in Higher Education, is a fellow of the Royal Society of Arts, and works with local and national nongovernmental organizations with interests in environmental, conservation, and sustainability issues. His most recent books are Sustainable Development and Learning: Framing the Issues (2003), and Key Issues in Sustainable Development and Learning: A Critical Review (2004), both written with Stephen Gough.

Stuart W. Shulman is an assistant professor in information sciences and public administration at the University of Pittsburgh. He is a senior research associate at the University of Pittsburgh's Center for Social and Urban Research, the Université de Genève, the European Union Institute, and the Oxford Internet Institute–based E-Democracy Centre. His research focuses on electronic rule making, digital citizenship, and service-learning efforts in the United States.

Bronislaw Szerszynski is a lecturer in environment and culture at the Centre for the Study of Environmental Change as well as the Institute for Environment, Philosophy, and Public Policy at Lancaster University, United Kingdom. He is the author of Nature, Technology, and the Sacred (2005), the coeditor (with Wallace Heim and Claire Waterton) of Nature Performed: Environment, Culture, and Performance (2003), the coeditor (with Celia Deane Drummond and Robin Grove-White) of Re-Ordering Nature: Theology, Society, and the New Genetics (2003), and the coeditor (with Scott Lash and Brian Wynne) of Risk, Environment, and Modernity: Towards a New Ecology (1996).

Stephen Zavestoski is an assistant professor of sociology at the University of San Francisco. His current research examines social movement activism surrounding the environmental causes of illnesses and the use of the Internet as a tool for enhancing public participation in environmental decision making.