

Preface

This work on Yawelmani phonology is not intended to present any new data on the language; nor is it intended to make any contribution to the theory of phonology through a study of the particular language. It is a reformulation of Professor Stanley Newman's description of the Yawelmani language in terms of generative phonology. In this reformulation the reader may note advances in the theory of phonology made in the period between the publication of his renowned work and of this one.

I should like to express my gratitude to Professor Stanley Newman for letting me use an unpublished list of Yawelmani nouns. I am grateful also to James D. McCawley and David Stampe, whose comments about an earlier version of this study were essential to its improvement. Richard Carter, Jeffrey Gruber, and Sanford Schane have given much needed help in preparing the final draft as well as valuable suggestions and criticism. But, above all, I am indebted to Morris Halle, without whose guidance, encouragement, and patience this study would never have come into existence.
