ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The first seeds for the development of this book were planted by our colleague, Evelyn Blumenberg at UCLA. Her interest in the Las Vegas sidewalks kindled our eventual inquiry into sidewalks as distinct urban spaces. We thank her for this and for allowing us to rework a co-authored piece to include it in this book.

We also wish to express our appreciation to Eran Ben-Joseph and Terry Szold of MIT. Their invitation to participate in a colloquium they organized in the fall of 2002 and contribute a chapter for their edited book Regulating Place, encouraged us to explore the framework of municipal controls affecting sidewalk uses.

Over the course of fieldwork and archival research we spoke with a multitude of individuals about sidewalks—officials in Public Works Departments and Bureaus of Street Services, representatives of Business Improvement Districts and business associations, homeless service providers, community activists, and members of nonprofit organizations. They are too many to list here, and some would not like to see their names in print, but we wish to thank everyone in Boston, Los Angeles, Miami, New York, and Seattle who took the time to talk with us about sidewalk activities and controls in their cities.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

We also wish to extend a special note of thanks to our very able research assistants. Leigha Schmidt was a great help early on. Anne McAuley provided invaluable help throughout the project, digging into municipal ordinances and regulations, conducting some interviews, and taking photographs of sidewalks in Los Angeles. Similarly, Jay Jones and Mike Holland at the Los Angeles City Archive gave immense assistance with Los Angeles historical material.

Almost everyone uses sidewalks, and we have had the pleasure of discussing our topic with countless knowledgeable people; we value their interpretations, challenges, and anecdotes. Renia gives special thanks to Ula and Karol Makowski and, when she moved to New Orleans, to Marla Nelson, Wheeler and Max Moorman, Jennifer Ruley, and Paul Lambert who introduced her to sidewalk life in a unique public city. Our friends, family members and colleagues who have talked with us about sidewalks are too numerous to name but much appreciated.

Finally, our deepest appreciation to our institutions, the Department of Urban Planning in the School of Public Affairs at UCLA and the Department of Planning and Urban Studies at the University of New Orleans for providing resources for this intellectual pursuit, and to the staff at the MIT Press, especially Robert Gottlieb, along with Laura Callen, Deborah Cantor-Adams, Susan Clark, Colleen Lanick, Clay Morgan, Mary Reilly, Megan Schwenke, Sharon Deacon Warne, and Rosemary Winfield for their support and wise counsel.
