

Marcia Brennan

Curating Consciousness

Mysticism and the Modern Museum

© 2010 Massachusetts Institute of Technology

All rights reserved. No part of this book may be reproduced in any form by any electronic or mechanical means (including photocopying, recording, or information storage and retrieval) without permission in writing from the publisher.

MIT Press books may be purchased at special quantity discounts for business or sales promotional use. For information, please email special\_sales@mitpress.mit.edu or write to Special Sales Department, The MIT Press, 55 Hayward Street, Cambridge, MA 02142.

This book was set in Berthold Walbaum and Futura by Graphic Composition, Inc. Printed and bound in the United States of America.

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

Brennan, Marcia.

Curating consciousness : mysticism and the modern museum / Marcia Brennan.

p. cm.

Includes bibliographical references and index.

ISBN 978-0-262-01378-9 (hardcover : alk. paper)

1. Sweeney, James Johnson, 1900–1986. 2. Mysticism and art. 3. Modernism (Aesthetics) 4. Art museums—Exhibitions. I. Title.

N72.M85B74 2010

701'.17—dc22

2009015566

10 9 8 7 6 5 4 3 2 1

Acknowledgments

The idea for this book first arose on a spring afternoon in 2001, just before I left Providence to go to Houston. I was walking with my teacher and advisor, Kermit S. Champa, and telling him how museum collaboration projects were going to be an institutional priority at Rice University. Kermit turned to me and said, “Well then, when you get to Houston, you might want to look into James Johnson Sweeney.” At the time, I couldn’t have guessed the magnitude of what sounded, at first, like one of Kermit’s casual suggestions. In retrospect, however, I suspect he had a pretty good idea of where all of this would lead.

Because so much of the conceptual framework for this book is based on the transdisciplinary intersection of art history and the study of mysticism and comparative religion, I am deeply indebted to two distinguished colleagues and friends for helping to illuminate both the ground under my feet and the sky above my head. Jeffrey Kripal has seen this project develop from the very beginning. Throughout our various collaborative teaching and research projects, our ongoing conversations, and through the superb example of his own writings, he has served as a source of profound insight, daring intellectual expression, unfailing humor, and gentle encouragement. And at the deepest level, my work has been shaped by Elliot R. Wolfson's poetic illuminations, his breathtaking paintings, his brilliant scholarship, and the gift of our friendship.

The research and writing for this book have been shaped by many gifted scholars who have shared their close readings and keen intellectual insights. I would especially like to thank Jeffrey Abt, Natalie Adamson, Jenny Anger, Jay Clarke, Linda Henderson, Michael Leja, Hajime Nakatani, Alexander Nemerov, Daniel Price, Lisa Saltzman, Kristina Van Dyke, David Ward, and Jody Ziegler. This project has also been supported by the American Council of Learned Societies, through a Contemplative Practice Fellowship; and by the Humanities Research Center at Rice University, through a Faculty Fellowship. I am especially grateful to Caroline Levander for her generous support.

At Rice, I am privileged to be surrounded by wonderful colleagues who have generously read and discussed some, most, or all of this manuscript. For their invaluable ideas and for the great care that each put into their readings, I would like to thank Bill Camfield, Leo Costello, April DeConick, Shirine Hamadeh, Gordon Hughes, Gregory Kaplan, Scott McGill, Linda Neagley, Bob Patten, and most of all, Caroline Quenemoen. Financial support for this project has been provided by Joseph Manca, formerly Chair of the Department of Art History, and Gary Wihl, formerly Dean of the School of Humanities. I also wish to thank Lucinda Cannady for her kindness and expert administrative assistance; Kathleen Hamilton, an artist who skillfully produced several of the illustrations appearing in this volume; Philip Montgomery, for making Special Collections material available at the Woodson Research Center; Ann Bazile, for her generous help with microfilms at the Kelley Center for Government Information; and especially Jet Prendeville at the Brown Fine Arts Library, who unfailingly went out of her way to build library collections relating to faculty research, while always sharing her valuable assistance and superb research skills.

This book would not have been possible without the archival and curatorial support of many individuals. I would like to thank Kathleen Tunney and Michelle Harvey at the Archives of the Museum of Modern Art; Francine Snyder at the Solomon R. Guggenheim Museum Library and Archives; and Lorraine A. Stuart and Amy Scott of the Museum of Fine Arts, Houston Archives. The MFAH archives have been a treasure house of primary source material, and I am especially indebted to Lorraine Stuart for facilitating my research in every way. Also at the MFAH, Mary Morton first provided heartfelt encouragement and crucial research materials, and Alison de Lima Greene has consulted extensively on this project and generously made object files and artworks accessible. I am also grateful to Jon Evans of the Hirsch Library for his valuable research support, and to Marty Stein for providing extremely helpful photographic assistance. My sincere thanks also go to Susan Halpert and Leslie A. Morris of the Houghton Library, Harvard University; Edwina Ashie-Nikoi of the New York University Archives; and Helen Harrison of the Pollock-Krasner House and Study Center.

For kindly sharing their valuable memories of James Johnson Sweeney in New York, Houston, and elsewhere, I would like to thank Jack Boynton, Bill Camfield, Ann Holmes, Karl Kilian, Edward Mayo, Pierre and Colette Soulages, Richard Stout, Jose Tasende, David Warren, and Dick Wray. Indeed, Jack Boynton not only contributed his recollections of Sweeney's exhibitions at the Guggenheim and the Museum of Fine Arts, Houston, but he produced an original drawing of James Johnson Sweeney, Imagined from Memory (2008, figure 1.3) to accompany this project. I would also like to express my appreciation to Aoibheann Sweeney for generously sharing her memories and perspective on her grandfather, James Johnson Sweeney, and on the Sweeney family.

Anna Brzyski kindly invited me to contribute a portion of chapter 2 to the anthology Partisan Canons (Duke University Press, 2007); and Ivan Gaskell and Francesco Pellizzi enabled an earlier version of chapter 5 to appear in Res 52 (Autumn 2007). These sections are reprinted with permission. A related essay focusing on Sweeney's relationship with his patrons, the art collectors John and Dominique de Menil, appeared in the catalogue for the twentieth anniversary celebration of The Menil Collection, A Modern Patronage: De Menil Gifts to American and European Museums (2007). I am grateful to Josef Helfenstein, Director of The Menil Collection, for the invitation to participate in this important volume.

At the MIT Press, Roger Conover has been a source of boundless generosity, kindness, and support; as is the case with so many authors, his nearly unseen but always strongly felt presence represents the joists under the floor on which we all stand. This text has also been shaped by Matthew Abbate's editorial expertise, by Erin Hasley's elegant sense of design, and by Anar Badalov's attention and care. It would not be the same book without them.

Closest to home, I would like to thank my husband Scott Brennan for bringing light to all that he touches. As always, he has my deepest love and gratitude.