Acknowledgments

Our project benefited from the advice and cooperation of a large number of people. Of course, none of them bears responsibility for any errors on our part. We developed our interest in the changing character of the professoriate during our time as dean and associate dean of the College of Literature, Science and the Arts at the University of Michigan. We learned a great deal during that decade from department chairs, associate chairs, provosts, associate provosts, presidents, fellow deans, technical staff, and others in Ann Arbor as well as from other deans in the CIC and the Association of American Universities. We want to give special thanks to colleagues at Michigan who gave us substantial insight and assistance, including James Duderstadt, Anthony (Rick) Francis, Philip Hanlon, Helene McCarren, Peter Steiner, Charles Yocum, Lori Haskins, Michael Cohen, David Dobbie, Kirsten Fogh Herold, Jon Curtis, Edward Gramlich, Gilbert Whitaker, Bonnie Halloran, Ian Robinson, Louise August, Jeanne Miller, and Carol Hollenshead.

We thank the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation and especially William Bowen and Harriet Zuckerman, who believed in our effort, funded it, and encouraged us along the way. We also acknowledge the support of the Department of Political Science, the Gerald R. Ford School of Public Policy at the University of Michigan, and four able research assistants—Clint Peinhardt, Keith Rainwater, Kathleen Tipler, and especially Kharis Templeman.

We received detailed comments on our manuscript from some of those mentioned above as well as from Ernst Benjamin, Morton Lowengrub, Ronald Ehrenberg, Jack Schuster, Nancy Weiss Malkiel, and several anonymous reviews for the MIT Press. We thank them, but take all responsibility for any errors. We thank the many colleagues at the University of Illinois who made time for us, especially Jessie Delia, who helped organize our visit to Champagne-Urbana; we thank many colleagues at the University of Washington, with special thanks to Lee Huntsman, David Hodge, Susan Jeffords, Phillip Hoffman, and Debra Friedman; we thank many colleagues at the University of Virginia, with special thanks to Gene Block, Edward Ayers, Gertrude Fraser, David Brenneman; we thank colleagues at the University of California and the Berkeley campus, with special mention of Robert Berdahl, George Breslauer, M.R.C. Greenwood, Ralph Hexter, Clayton Heathcock, Michael Mascuch, David Moers, Richard Newton, and Geoffrey Owen; we thank our colleagues at Washington University, with special thanks to Mark Wrighton and Edward Macias; we thank our colleagues at Duke University, with special thanks to Richard Brodhead, William Chafe, Nannerl Keohane, Peter Lange, Leigh DeNeef, and various professors of the practice; we thank our colleagues at MIT, with special mention of Charles Vest, Susan Hockfield, Robert Brown, Philip Khoury, Thomas Magnanti, Robert Redwine, Robert Silbey, Lydia Snover, and John Curry; we thank our colleagues at Cornell, with special mention of Hunter Rawlings, Biddy Martin, Jeffrey Lehman, Walter Cohen, Michael Matier, and Kathleen Gemmell; we thank our colleagues at Northwestern, with special mention of Lawrence Dumas, Michael Dacey, Barbara O'Keefe, John Birge, Eric Sundquist, and Adair Waldenberg.

We also want to express our appreciation for assistance from the American Association of University Professors, Phyllis Franklin and the Modern Language Association, the Coalition on the Academic Workforce, and the Association of American Universities. We both enjoyed working with the staff at the MIT Press. Finally, we benefited tremendously from the support, insights, and encouragement of friends and family—Cynthia Cross, Edith Fine, Mary Ann Ritter, and Eleanor Singer.
