ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

During the years of writing toward the topic of architecture's desire, I presented related work at several schools and had fruitful discussions with many colleagues. I am especially grateful for criticisms and suggestions from the faculty and students of the TU Delft and the Ohio State University. My own students at Harvard have made invaluable contributions to my thinking about this material. And I have especially benefited from sustained discussions with Pier Vittorio Aureli (who also pointed me to the drawing used on the cover), George Baird, Michael Bell, Marco de Michelis, Jeffrey Kipnis, Sanford Kwinter, Mary Lou Lobsinger, John McMorrough, Toshiko Mori, Winifried Elysse Newman, Diana Ramirez, Anthony Vidler, Val Warke, and Jim Williamson. I am deeply thankful to Fredric Jameson for his comments on an early draft.

Portions of some analyses included here have appeared in Cities of Artificial Excavation: The Work of Peter Eisenman, 1978–1988 (New York: Rizzoli, 1994), Sanctuaries: The Last Works of John Hejduk (New York: Whitney Museum and Abrams, 2002), and Bernard Tschumi (New York: Rizzoli, 2003). My essay "Prolegomena Linking the Advanced Architecture of the Present to That of the 1970s through Ideologies of Media, the Experience of Cities in Transition, and the Ongoing Effects of Reification," in Perspecta 32 (Cambridge: MIT Press, 2001), was proto- to the present proposition.

I thank Matthew Abbate and Margarita Encomienda at the MIT Press for their patience and care with the text and design. Cynthia Davidson nurtured and directed this project at every stage.
