Acknowledgments

The chance to write a second edition is dangerous. If starting to write a book is hard, finishing a book is harder. Writing the second edition was made more exciting and more complicated by the fact that so much new thinking and evidence has emerged in the six years between completing the first edition and completing this one. We have incurred many debts in staying on top of the latest developments.

In writing the book, our views have been shaped and challenged by many colleagues, including Patricia Armendáriz, Abhijit Banerjee, Tim Besley, Patrick Bolton, François Bourguignon, Anne Case, Maria Leonor Chaingneau, Daryl Collins, Jonathan Conning, Robert Cull, Angus Deaton, Asli Demirgüç-Kunt, Mathias Dewatripont, Esther Duflo, Bill Easterly, Maitreesh Ghatak, Xavier Giné, Christian Gollier, Claudio González-Vega, Charles Goodhart, Denis Gromb, Marek Hudon, Dean Karlan, Michael Kremer, Marc Labie, Jean-Jacques Laffont, Valerie Lechene, Julio Luna, Malgosia Madajewicz, Maria Maher, David McKenzie, Lamiya Morshed, Sendhil Mullainathan, Mark Pitt, Jean Tirole, Robert Townsend, Ashok Rai, Shamika Ravi, Debraj Ray, David Roodman, Ariane Szafarz, Lucy White, and Jacob Yaron.

We also thank the many policy analysts and practitioners who have taken time to share their views and experience. Armendáriz gratefully acknowledges collaboration from the Board of Grameen Trust Chiapas and, in particular, from Rubén Armendáriz Guerra, Maricela Gamboa, Karina López-Sánchez, Francisco and Virginia Millán, and Regis Ernesto Figueroa. She is particularly grateful to the members of the Grameen Crédit Agricole Microfinance Foundation, and, especially, to Raphaël Appert, René Carron, Yves Coutourier, Agnès de Cleremont Tonnerre, Luc Démazure, Huzzat Latifee, Daniel Lebèque, M. Shahjahan, Jean-Luc Perron, and Muhammad Yunus. She is particularly grateful to Jean-Luc Perron and Emmanuel de Lutz for their intellectual and logistical support. Beatriz Armendáriz thanks Alissa Fishbane, Dean Karlan, and Sendhil Mullainathan for great insights and support in developing a randomized control trial in southern Mexico; Neka Eza's hard work in supervising the surveys was incredibly helpful.

Morduch thanks especially Vikram Akula, Daryl Collins, Carlos Danel, Frank DeGiovanni, Asif Dowla, Chris Dunford, Syed Hashemi, Don Johnston, Elizabeth Littlefield, Imran Matin, Nachiket Mor, Lynne Patterson, Beth Rhyne, Marguerite Robinson, Jay Rosengard, Stuart Rutherford, and Tony Sheldon.

Fortunately, we were able to work with a group of talented and energetic individuals. We are particularly indebted to Catherine Burns for her active participation as researcher, writer, and editor on the second edition. Caitlin Weaver ably managed research assistants at the Financial Access Initiative, and Jonathan Bauchet helped overhaul the new chapter on impact evaluation.

Syed Hashemi, Stuart Rutherford, Mark Schreiner, Richard Rosenberg, and five anonymous reviewers provided detailed comments on an early version of the first edition, and their suggestions greatly improved the manuscript. Dale Adams, Marc Labie, Shamika Ravi, and Adel Varghese gave specific comments which shaped parts of the second edition.

Minh Phuong Bui wrote a set of exercises that accompanied the first edition, and we appreciate her useful feedback overall. Sarah Tsien provided research assistance on the first edition. Emily Wang gave helpful feedback on the first edition, and drafted challenging exercises for chapter 8 of this second edition. Stimulating conversations with Katherine Prescott and Annabel Vanroose are gratefully acknowledged. Alex Kaufman provided exceedingly useful comments and ideas for a new set of exercises, and José Ignacio Cuesta reviewed and re-drafted the exercises for the second edition. Beatriz Armendáriz is particularly grateful to Alex and José Ignacio who were there, by her side, at all times, reading every chapter and delivering most useful comments and suggestions for challenging exercises.

Jane Macdonald, our editor at the MIT Press, proposed the second edition and confidently steered the process to completion. We also thank John Covell at MIT for supporting the project.

Morduch gratefully acknowledges financial support from the Ford Foundation and from the Gates Foundation and AIG through the Financial Access Initiative. (The views expressed here, and any errors, are attributable to the authors only.)

Last, we thank our families. Beatriz Armendáriz thanks George-Antoine Capitani for his intellectual and moral support while writing the second edition. Jonathan Morduch thanks Amy Borovoy for her intellectual partnership.
