

Acknowledgments

The substance of this book owes a great deal to a number of people. In particular, it would be hard to exaggerate the influence of David Johnson. The basic architecture of the book represents a version of the ideas we developed jointly in the late 1970s and published as Johnson and Postal 1980. Many discussions with him since have greatly improved the formulations in the present book. I am particularly grateful for his commentaries on chapter 1.

Haj Ross has commented at length on many substantive details and provided rich criticism of a wide range of factual judgments. More important, perhaps, he has consistently provided great encouragement with respect to the goal of finishing and publishing this work, a goal that has at many points seemed beyond realization.

Special thanks are due to Chris Collins, who kindly went over the manuscript in detail, discovered many errors, and helped me avoid a number of confusions.

I am also indebted to several referees who commented on earlier versions of the manuscript. Even when I disagreed with some of the harsher evaluations, I found them useful, and here and there I have incorporated reactions to specific points.

Special appreciation is due to Anne Mark whose copyediting magic and tireless and meticulous labor has helped turn an original with innumerable flaws into an outcome that is immeasurably better.

I would also like to thank my wife Eve Tauss, who over time has not reacted too badly to the task of providing grammatical judgments and who has selflessly devoted great amounts of time and energy to preparing the index.

Last, I am greatly in debt to Marc Authier, Vincent Chanetom, Gilles Fauconnier, Jean-Yves Pollock, and Philippe Schlenker, who have very kindly provided me with crucial grammatical data on French relevant to section 8.10. None of them are responsible for the interpretations I have made of their judgments.
